

The Swedish Trade Council in the UK, the Mayor of London and the Embassy of Sweden are hosting a one day workshop on the topic of London's decentralised energy programme that will allow you to explore how experience and skills from Sweden could assist in delivering sustainable heating and cooling. The workshop will be held at the Swedish Ambassador's Residence in central London on the 8th of November.

For many years Sweden has been at the forefront of utilising Combined Heat and Power for District Energy. The effort has resulted in substantial reductions in CO2 emissions, while maintaining sustainable economic growth.

We would like to invite you to the Swedish Ambassador's Residence for this invitation-only forum, which will give an interactive opportunity to discuss development issues for rolling out district heating in a workshop setting. With Swedish industry in place for the event, current issues and discussion will be contrasted with extensive experience and expertise from the Swedish district energy industry.

Delegates will also be introduced to future developments and capabilities of the district energy and combined heat and power industry, as well as meeting with companies from the Swedish district energy industry.

The workshop will include topics such as:

- Background, history and success factors of Swedish district energy
- Political challenges & opportunities in London and the UK contrasted with experience from Sweden
- Opportunities and challenges from a private investment perspective
- Operational solutions and benefits from city wide district energy networks – success stories from Sweden
- Ownership and business models put into a consumer and financial context discussion
- Presentations by Swedish companies

Workshop sessions and open discussions will be held throughout the day in relation to solutions and collaboration opportunities ahead.

Who should attend:

The workshop is specifically aimed at London's public sector for delivering district energy plans, schemes and undertakings as well selected cities with emerging district energy plans.

- Invited delegates are decision makers such as Heads, Directors, and Managers of Decentralised Energy, Energy Services, Sustainability, Environment, Planning, Finance, Heat Strategy and Policy

Attendance is free of charge, however numbers are restricted! Please register here!
